

Symposium: professional attitude of advisors in intersectional counseling contexts.

The digital symposium "Professional attitude of advisors in intersectional advisory contexts" will take place as part of the international weeks against racism 2022 in the city of Dresden.

March 31, 2022.

9:00 a.m. – 3:00 p.m.

Online symposium.

Advisory centers have specific responsibilities and are usually geared towards one target group - for example, the supplementary independent participation advisory centers (EUTB) focus on clients with disabilities, migration advisory centers regarding migrants and women's advisory centers regarding women. However, clients do not only have one identity, but also combine various dimensions. These can have different effects in advisory contexts. A deaf woman with a migration biography goes to a migration advice center because she needs support with professional questions and her disability plays a role. Intersectional constellations can pose a particular challenge for advisors. The symposium would like to focus on intersectional advisory contexts and, among other things, pursue the following questions: What does intersectionality mean in advising and how can advising be designed intersectionally in practice? In addition to the exchange of experiences from practice and the need for action resulting from this, an intersectional perspective on consulting practice should also be developed together.
